OYSTERS

It wasn't right, and future generations will say that it wasn't. He came tramping up stairs, tossed his hat on to a table, and as he sat down in a chair he carelessly remarked:
"Suppose you'd like a big item?"
"Yes, of course," replied the lone reporter.

"I haven't been to any other paper forward," he continued, as he leaned forward; "I've taken the Free Press for twenty nine years, and I've walked four miles to give you this item."

"Well, I'm very much obliged indeed. What is the item?"

"Well, you know the Grand Trunk Junction?"

"Yes, out here about three miles from the City Hall."

"Well, it was a mile beyond that.
Me an' another fellow was coming in on the track. He was a stranger, and seemed down hearted and gloomy, said he didn't care two cents whether he lived or died."

"Poor fellow! Can you describe him?"

"Yes, he was about five feet, six; had red hair, big feet; coarse clothes, blue eyes and no whiskers."

"Well, go on."

"We'd got within a mile of the Junction when the express train from the east came thundering along."

"Yes."

"And of course we stepped off the track."

"Yes."

"I wasn't looking for nor expecting any such thing, you know, for the man didn't let on nor betray himself by word or look. If I'd only suspected it, why I could have grabbed him."

"Yes, I see."

"Well we stood fac- to the train.
I was a little ahead of him, and what did he do as the train got within three hundred feet of us?"

"Rushed to the track?"

"No, not that. He made a jump for the rail, knelt down, and—"

"Great blazes, but it was awful!" interrupted the reporter.

"Awful? I guess it was! I was never so weak in my life. He deliberately laid his neck on the rail, shut his eyes, and—"

"And the locomotive took his head clean off," shouted the reporter, springing up.

"No. As I was saying, he deliberately placed his neck on the rail, held it there—"

"And was mashed?"

"No, sir—held it there for a moment and then—"

"And was then struck by the pilot!"

"No, sir—said then he deliberately took it off again, and is now in a saloon around the corner inquiring for a job."

The reporter leaned back and looked at him for a long time.

The stranger leaned back and looked at the reporter.

Nothing disturbed the deep silence but the ticking of the clock.

By and by the man with the item looked up at the sky-light, down at the floor and softly slid out into the hall and was gone.—Detroit Free Press.

"On, Charles!" she gasped, as she rose with some difficulty from her fourth plate of strawberries and cream, "if I eat any more I think I will burst!" And Charles fumbled abstractedly in his pocket and murmured: "That last plate just bursted me!"

Choice Family Flour!

ALWAYS ON HAND,

At D. S. FORD'S.

May 14, 1874.

YOU KISSED ME.

You kissed me! My head had dropped low on your breast,

With a feeling of shelter and infinite rest;

While the holy emotion my tongue dared not speak,

Flushed up like a flame from my heart to my cheek;

Your arms held me fast; oh, your arms were so bold!

Heart beat against heart in that passionate hold;

Your glances seemed drawing my soul through my eyes,

As the sun draws the mist from the sea to the skies;

And your lips clung to mine till I prayed in my bliss,

They might never unclasp from that rapturous kiss.

You kissed me! My heart, my breath and my will,

In delicious joy for the moment stood still;

Life had for me then no temptations, no charms,

No vista of pleasure—outside of your arms;

And were I this moment an angel possessed

Of the glory and peace that are given to those who love,

I would fling my white robes unrepin-tingly down,

To nestle once more in that haven of
rest,

With your lips upon mine and my head on your breast.

You kissed me! My soul in bliss so divine,

Reeled and swooned like a foolish man drunken with wine;

And I thought 'twere delicious to die then, if I could.

Would but come while my lips were yet moist with your breath;

'Twere delicious to die, if my heart might grow cold,

While your arms wrapped me round in that passionate fold;

And these are the questions I ask day and night

Must my life taste but once such exquisite delight?

Would you care if your breast were my shelter as then?

And if you were here would you kiss me again?

TOOTH Pulling Extraordinary.

A Kansas paper tells a story about a man who had the toothache dreadfully. He was too mean to go into town and pay a dentist fifty cents for extracting the tooth, so he determined to drag it out with the popular method of the noble red man. So that Kansas person proceeded to the woods and wrapped a piece of copper wire tightly around the offending biacupid. Then he took his mule, and rigged up a block and tackle and bent down a stout sapling to the ground. He lay flat on his back, threw the wire firmly to the tree, and reached over and cut the rope by which the mule held on. In about one second a certain sufferer from the tooth ache might have been seen progressing toward the blue ethereal sky at lightning speed, and turning successive somersaults and flip-flaps and things, as he went.

After tearing around up there for a few minutes, grazing the monarchs of the forest, and moving about forty yards onward, he swooned down into a pond, and began to strike out for shore. His tooth is in its socket yet —for the wire was wrenched loose from the tree. But you never met a man who seemed to have a more whole-souled detestation of Indian customs than that man has. He says it disgusts him to think about a red man now.

The National Banking Business.

Not the least absurd of the silly catch-words adopted by the inflation quacks is "hoisted monopolies." The national banking system may be all wrong or all right, but it is no more a monopoly than the milling business, the laundry business, or any other business which requires capital to go into it. Under the existing law any man or set of men in any State can go into the national banking business, provided they have the necessary means, and can enjoy all the benefits of the system by complying with the requirements of the law. There is no limitation as to the amount of banking capital or the number of banks which may exist in any State or in the country at large. It is true the government will enforce certain conditions to the banking business for the safety of depositors and bill-holders, but every citizen can engage in the business by complying with those conditions. National banking is no more a monopoly than the distilling business, which has to be carried on under certain legal restrictions, or than the retailing of liquor, which no person can engage in without a license.

Those who call it a monopoly are either ignorant of the meaning of the word, or else they use it dishonestly and for demagogic purposes. As the law stands every man may engage in the banking business who complies with its provisions. The only way to make it more free would be to authorize every man to print bank notes, affix his signature thereto, and issue them as money, and probably this is what the inflation quacks will finally demand.
